

ON the morning of Feb. 24th, 2004 on Seattle radio station KBKS (KISS) 106.1 at 5.38am, the female morning show host after making comments about Mardi Gras celebrations allegedly proceeded to 'flash' the room while they were responding to her comments. As for what I am to understand, other larger morning shows in the country have been banned from having any public nudity in their studios, or at least they may not comment on any.

As I am not outright offended by such a display I have to implore you to treat every station equally. If the biggest name has to comply the smallest must also. If the smallest is allowed, then the larger ones are too. It's your law, I just want to see it done equally.

thank you, I look forward to hearing from you soon.
